Rural Healthcare has never been stable, economical or fully effective. The conventional model of rural health is clearly broken and requires reinvention. Althing has the new and only proven model that proactively and universally reaches rural communities with qualified, inclusive and effective health services.

Leveraging the only qualified and medical grade engagement solution, Phrazer/Kitsune, Althing is centering community care at the school districts. In district, Phrazer/Kitsune systems provide health service to students and staff. From district, students take Phrazer/Kitsune home where qualified health services are provided to families in all languages, literacies and cultures to proactively bring clinical services proactively. Expanding out from that solid foundation the local employers are provided systems to reach their staff, again in all demographics. The services provided are supported by insurance and most medical interventions are either free or less than $50 and include a provider, prescriptions and record interchange with primary care providers. To complete the special model service, Althing partners with cities to embed physical clinical locations that are owned by the community and managed by Althing on a 5 year concessions basis; ensuring long term clinical viability. Althing has also established a placement contract with the Minnesota State Colleges and Universities to embed clinical services for the community, throughout the extensive campus network in the state. The first model community and clinic example can be see in Austin Minnesota and at Riverland College.
